Quit India campaign

Reading Level Article Images & Videos Related

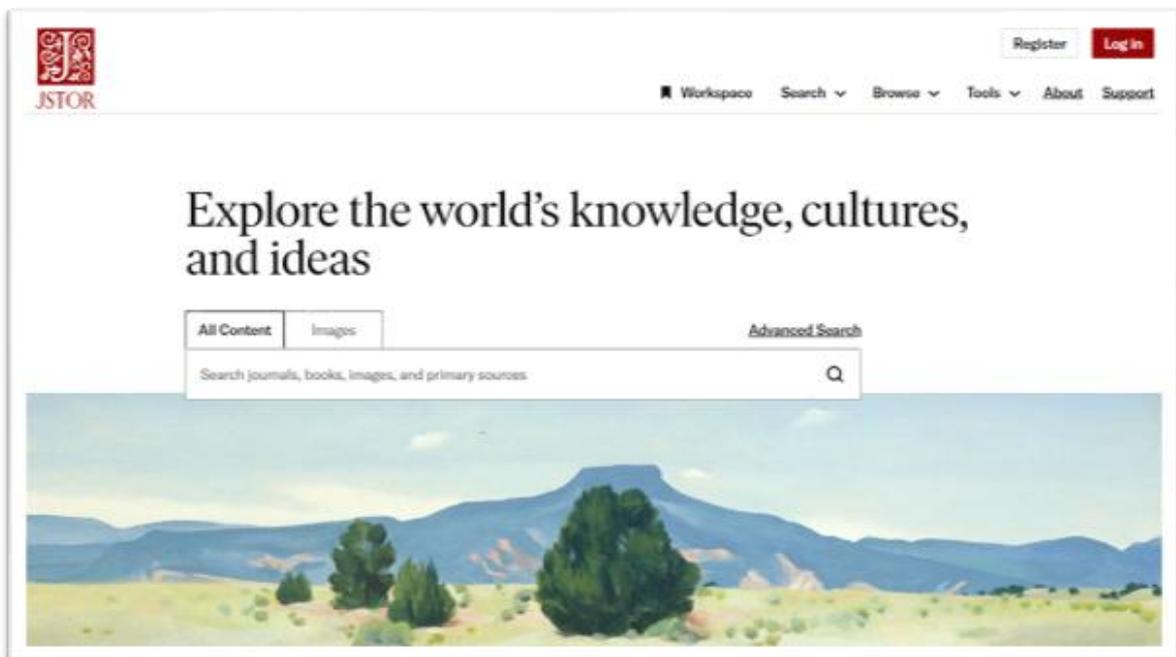

Refusing to support the colonial British government's involvement in World War II, in 1942 the Indian National Congress party launched the campaign known as Quit India. The movement called for India's immediate independence and for British withdrawal from the subcontinent. Although it was quickly suppressed, the Quit India campaign raised the threat of a massive nonviolent struggle and thereby influenced Britain's decision to grant independence to India.
