Births, Deaths and Marriages: Australia, New Zealand, England & Wales

Guidelines for birth, death and marriage research

Start from yourself and work backwards. Your own full birth certificate will lead to information on your parents. From their certificates, you can find information on earlier generations.

* For 1829-1840 consult "Access to Ancestors" MFPAM 929.3941 1990 C2, ask at level 3 desk.

NOTE:

- Check New South Wales records for Victoria pre 1851 and Queensland pre 1859
- Many of the birth, death and marriage indexes are available on CD-ROM, microfiche and online. Check One Search catalogue or CD-ROM information booklet for more information.
- Index and certificate information varies among the States. For details, ask at the family history desk or consult Graham Jaunay's website <https://www.jaunay.com/bdm.html>
- Search ancestryLibrary edition or FindMyPast, both available at State Library, to find English and Welsh civil records to 2001. See also Info Guide : England and Wales: birth, death and marriage indexes

Other useful indexes:

- The International Genealogical Index (IGI) compiled by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints is available on microfiche, and online <https://www.familysearch.org>. It contains millions of baptismal and marriage entries from civil and church registers world-wide. The website is free but you will need to create an account to view your search results.
- State Library holds some parish registers for New South Wales, Queensland, Tasmania and Western Australia, as well as British, North America, Western Europe and Scandinavia indexes on microfilm, microfiche and CD-ROM. Ask at level 3 desk.

Helpful hints

- Use primary source material such as birth, death and marriage certificates. The indexes alone are not enough. Certificates provide information for further research. This can include place of birth, parents' names, address, length of spent time in the colony, occupation, religion and details of other family members.
- Be aware of different spelling of names: A person might spell their name many ways for different reasons. Names were often misheard, so misspelt.
- Ages: It was easier for people to be 'flexible' about their age, based on the situation of the time, so it was not always accurate.
- Find records in Australia: Start here before searching overseas, it is easier and cheaper.
- Check what others are researching: Look at items such as the "Genealogical Research Directory" (FAMHIS 929.1072), an international register of family historians.
- Cross-check information through resources such as church records, monumental inscriptions and other cemetery records; undertakers' records, probate records and indexes to newspaper birth, death and marriage records.
- Maintain records of your sources. Use a research log as this is useful for checking information and finding errors. Always record the details of records you have checked – you may need them again! Samples are available on the internet, from societies, and in handbooks.
- Prepare family group sheets and descendant charts to record relationships other than the direct line. Find these on the internet, from societies, and in handbooks.
- Find out more about the lives of your family in their historical, geographical, social and occupational contexts. Directories, newspapers, maps, gazetteers, electoral rolls, government and local records are valuable sources of information. Check the family history Research Guides for more details about these resources.
